Una Temporada Para Silbar

Ivan Doig

Una Temporada Para Silbar Ivan Doig

With an ad announcing that she "can't cook, but doesn't bite," widow Rose Llewellyn offers her services as a housekeeper in the fall of 1909. Rose's ad immediately catches the attention of Oliver Milliron, a widower with three children and little skill when it comes to chores, and he hires her to try to reinstate some order in his house in Marias Coulee, Montana. Thus begins the unforgettable season Rose and her bookish brother Morris spend in this farming town, where Morris becomes the schoolhouse teacher, and they, the Milliron family, and the town of Marias Coulee will never be the same. "Con un anuncio que indica que "no cocina, pero tampoco muerde," la viuda Rose Llewellyn se ofrece en el otoño de 1909 como ama de llaves. El anuncio de Rose inmediatamente capta la atención de Oliver Milliron, un viudo con tres hijos y poca mano en las tareas domésticas, y la contrata para poner un poco de orden en su casa de Marias Coulee, Montana. Así comienza la inolvidable temporada que Rose y su hermano estudioso Morris pasan en este pueblo de granjeros, en el cual Morris pronto se convierte en el maestro de la única escuela, y ni ellos ni la familia Milliron ni el pueblo de Marias Coulee volverán a ser los mismos."

Review

"A book to pass on to your favorite readers: a story of lives of active choice, lived actively." --"Publishers Weekly", on the English-language edition

"An entrancing new chapter in the literature of the West." "Booklist," starred review, on the English-language edition"

"Ivan Doig writes about a vanished way of life on the Western plains with the kind of irony-free nostalgia that seems downright courageous in these ironic times. . . . When a voice as pleasurable as his evokes a lost era, somehow it doesn't seem so lost after all." "Washington Post," on the English-language edition"

"A book to pass on to your favorite readers: a story of lives of active choice, lived actively." "Publishers Weekly," on the English-language edition" About the Author

Ivan Doig was a farmer and park ranger in Montana before he became an author, editor, and journalist. His upbringing inspires his writing, and because of it he is considered one of the best modern-day authors of the American West. He lives in Seattle. Juan Tafur is a novelist and translator who works as a freelance editor in collaboration with several newspapers and publishers in Latin America, Spain, and the United States."
